Critical Teen Dating Violence Definition

"... a general term used to capture any type of violence rooted in exploiting unequal power relationships between genders. [Including] gender norms and role expectations specific to society as well as situational power imbalances and inequities..."

New York City Mayor's Office to End Domestic Violence

Examples of Teen Dating Violence

There are multiple ways teen dating violence or abusive behaviors can manifest along the continuum and patterns of power & control

- Emotional/Psychological Abuse
- Technological Abuse
- Hazing
- Physical Abuse
- Stalking
- Sexual Abuse and Rape

Interactive Activity

Youth from Communities that have been Historically Marginalized

Youth from communities that have been historically marginalized may experience specific forms of abuse and experience additional fears and concerns.

- Black, Brown and Indigenous Youth
- Youth with Disabilities + Deaf Youth
- Queer, Trans, and Gender Nonconforming Youth
- Immigrant and Resettled Youth
- Incarcerated or Systems-Involved Youth

Youth Engagement in Rural Communities

Love Languages in Healthy Relationships: Idaho Coalition Against Sexual & Domestic Violence

The Beginnings of “Youth Engagement”

- Youth as "open" or "empty" vessels that required filling & adults just knew better
- Mainstream recruitment of youth from traditionally successful families and mainstream to inform our work
- Fear-based engagement and warnings of teen dating violence
- Rooted in Paternalism

The Middle: Knowing There is Better

- Prevention and response to teen dating violence has to be informed by people most impacted
- Young people know more about "Youth Culture"
- Adulthood: a system that favors adults & diminishes the agency of young people
- Undoing harmful misconceptions of gender and violence
- Understanding how race and ethnicity are interconnected to gender violence

Services and programming must be adapted for young people's needs

Now: A Multi-generational Strategy to End Gender Violence

Intergenerational Partnerships

- Youth are integrated at every level of our work
- Young people are active contributors to identifying strategies and implementing culture shifts
- Adults advocate for change in systems for youth
- Adults provide guidance and support in culturally significant ways
